MEMORANDUM FOR: National Intelligence Officer for Counterterrorism
FROM: Director of Central Intelligence
SUBJECT: Response to NSDD-138, "Combatting Terrorism"

1. That's quite a formidable array of counterterrorist activities you pulled together for submission to NSC and for later consideration in the budget process. I now want you to review which of these steps can either be put under-way or intensified right now.

4. You project that [] is becoming available around the turn of the year. What is the current value of [] Is there any way it can be made more valuable in the interim?

5. Can we be tapping the reserve now to accelerate efforts against nuclear terrorism described on pages 47 and 48 of Attachment 2?

7. How are we doing with the liaison relationships? Should there be a drive to expand or intensify them? How many liaison relationships do we have on terrorism? How many more are available?

8. How many quick reaction rescue teams have we now trained? How many such programs are underway? How many other countries have good computer data banks on terrorists? Are we working hard enough to use them or otherwise take advantage of them?

9. The suggestions on attracting analysts and case officers to counterterrorism work to help them develop higher skills are important. What are we doing about that now?

10. I see that you have done quite a lot of speaking on counterterrorism. Have you worked out a good statement or set of talking points on the requirements and challenges of counterterrorist work? If so, I would like to see it.

11. What I am looking for in raising these questions is assurance that we're just not waiting for the NSC to put out its document without pushing at every front that is available to us now. We are busy sensitizing the Community to the importance and the need for these activities.
